A ONE-PAGE STARTING POINT

Five decisions to make before the next proposal lands

Readiness is a short list of decisions.
Make them now, or make them badly under pressure later.

None of these needs a bigger staff or an outside consultant, and every one can be decided in a quiet room with nothing on the table. Write down who owns each decision and when it gets made. Bring this to a meeting and use it as the agenda.

01 What can we actually support

Water supply, wastewater, electrical capacity, roads. Knowing your ceiling is what makes an early conversation productive, and it saves a developer money too.

OWNER

DECIDED BY

02 Are the project types we expect defined as land uses

If the ordinance has no definition and no permit path for what is coming, the absence does not read as neutral. It reads as unprepared.

OWNER

DECIDED BY

03 What is our information and notification policy

What confidentiality terms you will and will not sign, and how many days after a formal inquiry the public hears it from you.

OWNER

DECIDED BY

04 Who is on the bench

Planning consultant, land use counsel, fiscal and environmental analysts, identified before you need them, and already familiar with your comprehensive plan.

OWNER

DECIDED BY

05 Does everyone agree on how this runs

The elected body, staff, the clerk, planning and counsel, agreed in advance on how inquiries get handled, who says what and when, and who does what once a private conversation becomes a public process.

OWNER

DECIDED BY

Pick the one your community could realistically decide in the next 90 days. The other four get easier once one exists.